

The Old Map Adventure

While helping to clean out the attic at home, I found an old, yellowed map. It was hand-drawn and showed places around our town that I'd never heard of before.

I brought it to school, and all the class helped figure out what it showed. Some of the class recognised places that were near where they lived and others had heard people mention the names before. Most of us had never visited the places that were on the map so we decided to explore them. We visited some with our class and some with our families. We found a hidden well, an ancient tree, and the ruins of an old church. It was like a treasure hunt through history!

We drew a new map with colourful pictures and stories about each spot. We shared this map with all of the local schools and groups that would be interested. It was great to think that people would be discovering and learning about all the amazing history around us.
